■ Read the passage

When the old library in the town caught fire, the whole neighbourhood gathered — not to watch, but to help. Children formed a human chain to pass out boxes of rare books, while shopkeepers brought buckets of water before the fire engine arrived. By the time the flames were controlled, most of the collection had been saved. The librarian later said that the fire had taken away a roof, but the people of the town had shown her what a “living library” truly meant.

Why did the neighbourhood gather at the library?

What did the children do to help?

What does “living library” mean? (inference)
